ATLANTIC CITY BLAZE IS NOW BEING PROBED

Officials Investigate Cause Of Flames Which Swept Half A Block

MANY ARE HOMELESS

ATLANTIC CITY, July 6.—An investigation by several agencies is under way today to determine the cause of the $250,000 fire which razed half a block, including six small hotels, rooming houses, stores and exhibits between Missouri and Arkansas avenues, and from the Boardwalk half way to Pacific avenue, late yesterday.

The fire, which was the most destructive and spectacular in recent years, swept with almost incredible speed through the block of tinderlike frame structures, and for a time menaced a large portion of the old "Bowery" section of the resort.

Many visitors lost all their effects when the flames roared through ten of the small hotels and rooming houses on the south side of Arkansas avenue, opposite the Million Dollar Pier.

On Missouri avenue, the next thoroughfare to the south, half a dozen small homes were either destroyed or badly damaged.

On the Boardwalk the fire destroyed half a dozen frame properties occupying half of the block facing the ocean, but jumped around six other more substantial stores and exhibits, including the baby incubator exhibit at the corner of Arkansas avenue.

The big five-story frame Columbia Hotel, on the south side of Missouri avenue, at the Boardwalk, was menaced by the fire, but escaped the flames. It was first reported the fire had started in the Columbia Hotel and the structure had been damaged, but this quickly proved erroneous. The hotel and its guests suffered no loss.

Firemen and residents of the neighborhood agreed today that the fire started at the corner of Missouri avenue and the Boardwalk, opposite the Columbia Hotel, but were uncertain as to the cause or the exact building in which it originated.

Several hundred persons were made homeless by the fire, and were given shelter last night by other small hotels and apartment house proprietors. Several of those burned out lost not only all their effects, but their savings in money as well.

The loss imposes a special hardship on a score of working men and their families who occupied small frame dwellings on Missouri avenue near the walk.

The preliminary investigation of Fire Chief John Barnett, assisted by his deputies, Miller and Krouse, found them in agreement that the flames started under the flooring abutting the Boardwalk of either the National Exhibit showroom of the Remington Arms Company, at the corner of Missouri avenue, or the adjoining property to the north of the "Radio" game, a new popular resort pastime, in which the players win prizes through "lucky numbers," controlled by an electrical "scoreboard."

NO CLUE AS TO HOW WOMAN MET DEATH

The State Police and Trenton Authorities Are Still Baffled

MAY BE HIT-RUN CASE

TRENTON, N. J., July 6.—Authorities have as yet been unable to determine how Mrs. Ida Dimpfl, 33 years old, of Fallsington, Pa., who was found fatally injured along the Lincoln Highway near the Fallsington tunnel early yesterday morning, met her death. One theory is that she was struck by a passing car after alighting from a bus, while another is that she was attacked and her body hurled from a machine.

County Physician Charles H. Mitchell, who performed an autopsy on the victim at Kemp's morgue, said it was hardly possible that she could have received the fatal injuries to the top of her head if struck by a car. He is inclined to believe that the young woman was slugged and thrown from an automobile. Wounds on her body would indicate this, he said.

The body of the victim lay in Kemp's morgue until yesterday afternoon, when it was identified by her sister-in-law, Mrs. John Voorhees, of Fallsington. The body was taken to the home of a sister of the victim, Mrs. Benjamin Moffett, 32 Lincoln avenue. Besides her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Coan Voorhees, of Fallsington, Mrs. Dimpfl is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Moffett and Miss Mabel Maturi, of Trenton, and two brothers, John and Earl Voorhees, of Fallsington. The funeral will be held from the Moffett home at a time to be announced later. Kemp is in charge.

Troopers Richard O. Bankert and Ray H. Simmons, of the Pennsylvania State Police, last night interviewed the bus drivers who run to Fallsington and none remembered Mrs. Dimpfl having alighted from a bus at the spot where she was found. The buses carried large holiday crowds and the drivers were unable to tell who left the machines at or near Fallsington.

Troopers Bankert and Simmons, assisted by Detective Donahoe, are checking up on the report that Mrs. Dimpfl left home on Monday to come Dimpfl left home on Monday to go to Trenton to meet her husband, from whom she had been separated for some time. Dimpfl is now living in Buffalo and was to have met his wife at the Reading Terminal, Trenton. Whether she met her husband or how she made the return trip to Fallsington have not yet been determined.

Chief Walter ordered Captain Botschart and Detective Donahoe to question the five youths who brought the woman to St. Francis Hospital, and they said they found the woman lying in the road. The youths were: Joseph Chell, Power street; Tommy "Kid" Murphy and Johnny Brennan, pupilists, and Anthony and Michael Russo. Chief Walter reported the matter to District Attorney Eastburn, who assigned troopers to investigate. Acting Chief of Police Burns, of Morrisville, says he found pieces of broken headlight near the spot where Mrs. Dimpfl lay. Burns believes that she was struck by a "hit and run" driver.

POLICE EXPLAIN WHY "TAGGING" WAS STOPPED

Act of Recent Legislature Makes It Unlawful To Thus Solicit

IT IMPEDES TRAFFIC

Highways Here Were Constructed Under State-Aid Plan

Considerable discussion has arisen over the action of the Bureau of Police on July 4th in prohibiting the members of Beaver Fire Company No. 4 tagging automobiles as a means of raising funds. As a matter of public information and thus preventing other organizations of a similar character from getting into difficulty with the State Highway and municipal police authorities, a Courier representative today interviewed John J. McGuckin, chief of police of Bristol.

It appears that "tagging motorists" has become such a general custom throughout the state and in many instances the practice had been so grossly abused, that the last session of the legislature was prompted to take prohibitory action as a means of preventing traffic congestion and also as a means of stopping what had become a general nuisance to the traveling public.

"Representatives of Beaver Fire Co. came to me and asked if they might tag motorists," said Chief McGuckin. "Without any thought upon the subject and without knowledge of the action of the recent legislature I told them to go ahead until I looked up the law, and if I found that there was an act of Assembly prohibiting it I would serve notice that it was a violation and order it discontinued, which I did."

In the absence from Bristol this morning of Burgess C. L. Anderson, the Courier representative called upon Councilman Joseph R. Grundy, a member of the Street & Highway Committee of Borough Council, which committee conducted the negotiations on behalf of the Borough with the Pennsylvania Railroad, the County of Bucks and the State Highway Department, which lead up to the building of the State Highways through the Borough.

In answer to questions Mr. Grundy said: "I am very glad to discuss the incident of Monday, in which the firemen were stopped, by the Police Department, from soliciting from those passing through the borough, for the reason it affords an opportunity of getting before the public certain facts covering the construction, control and maintenance of the State Highways within boroughs.

"In the first place, I was aware of the existence of the Act of Assembly which gives the Highway Department control of the police powers on State Highways under which Chief McGuckin acted on Monday. This act was introduced at the last session of the General Assembly with the approval of the State Highway Department, was supported by our Senator and members of the House of Representatives and promptly signed upon its passage, by Governor Fisher. Those who followed our local legislation before and during the construction of our concrete highways, recall the Pond street highway was constructed a width of 18 feet exclusively at the expense of the state; while in the construction of Otter, Mill and Radcliffe streets application was made to our County Commissioners to bear 25% of the cost of a standard State Highway, with request by the commissioners for the state to bear 50% of the cost of same, leaving for the borough the cost of only 25% of their construction, the State to later assume 90% of the upkeep after construction, the Borough bearing the remaining 10%.

"It was in return for this generous assistance the State was accorded control over traffic operation and given police powers as exercised by the State police through Chief McGuckin. In the control, operation and direction of traffic on state highways, the Highway Department is actuated by the principle that the highways are built by the state for the accommodation of the people of the State at large and other states, for the movement of traffic from point to point with the least delay, and wisely have caused the enactment of legislation preventing local interference, such as was indulged in by the firemen on Monday last.

"Apart from the traffic delay inci-

HAPPINESS

Who is the happiest person in Bristol?

There have been beauty, popularity, Venus, movie, ear and eye contests, so why not a happiness contest? Succumbing to the long-distance fad, why not a happiness marathon with the dance, pie and other marathonic successors to the all-Greek sport?

Inspired by such proverbs as "the pursuit of happiness is the first law of nature," and "happiness is the ultimate aim of life," a reporter of the Courier set forth to seek out Bristol's happiest individual or class.

At the start of his mission of merriment he looked for joy at its best among the youth of the mayor's domain. Crossed by rains on the day of the championship game with the Main streeters, by lost pennies, razor straps, school books, baths and music lessons Youth sent him on to Old Age.

Old Age he found in a rage over bobbed-hair, flappers, rheumatism, the weather and chickens on the front lawn and the seeker after the blue bird fo happiness turned away, whither he knew not.

Chancing in a bachelor club he learned that the happiest of men are those married and managed, but he turned away in dismay when he overheard a benedict in the apartment above envy the emancipated ones below.

Wives told him widows were the most blessed of all mortals, but widows lamented their weeds.

Psychologists cautioned him that the song-filled life of some carefree races and classes was not happiness, long sought, but a noisy habit of shiftless peoples.

On the guidance of each the reporter hastened from park bench warmer to millionaire idlers, to multi-millionaire business men and following the old nursery rhyme he interviewed in vain "the rich-man, poor-man, beggar-man, thief, doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief."

Emulating Sir Launfal and his Holy Grail, the reporter returned home worn-out and frail, and as he passed the door of the colyumist's office he heard, "the happiest man in Bristol is the other fellow."

A cynic is one who says there are two sides to every scandal, the truth and the one everyone repeats.

The most dangerous crossing in the world is double crossing.

One difference between hugging and dancing is you dance in a crowd.

Secret thought of man: "I'll teach her to use rouge with more discretion when we're married.

Buy gas cheerfully. Think of the great philanthropies your money makes possible.

Why howl if aliens shoot up the natives? That's the way the first settlers got established.

You seldom see a married genius. The explanation is that nobody else can love him as much as he does.

There probably never will be a time when the older generation isn't worrying about what is to become of the younger.

Another eternal triangle is hootch, flivver, coroner.

Culture doesn't guarantee success. Many a polished man has a dull finish.

What Every Girl Should Know

by GISA PRUCHONE

Copyright, 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

"WHAT EVERY GIRL SHOULD KNOW," with Patsy Ruth Miller, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Mary Sullivan—slender, beautiful, red-headed—is the meteor of the tennis universe. A poetical, queerly spiritual girl is Mary, dspite her physical prowess. She has grown up with tennis balls. Her mother died sewing them for a living. Her spirit lives on in Mary. Mary becomes acquainted with Wally Mason, a young reporter. Wally and Mary have much in common. Mary keeps house for her brothers, David and Robert. David, the family support, hopes Mary will get safely married; but Mary disbelieves in love. She loves life. Wally takes her for a night ride.

"What are you telling, me, Wally?" Mary was so deliciously sleepy. The breeze rumpled her skirt, and lifted her hair, and caressed the lobe of the ear that wasn't pressed against Wally's sleeve. Well-being filled her as comfort fills the well-fed tabby at the side of the fire. She cushioned her head against the brown leather of the car and flew with the stars. There was no earth, no long green roadster, no Wally. Just her gold-tipped wings. Elaine, the lily-maid of Astolat flying with the stars in a green roadster. With Lancelot? No. Not Lancelot. Lancelot was home, astride his broomstick, stalking a dignified Patch. Then Wally brought her to earth.

"Mary, I love you, dear," he said.

The little green car flew on, with the stars keeping pace above and the wind singing against the motor. It was difficult to hear when words were spoken to the blackness of the silence ahead. What she had heard could not possibly be what Wally said. In the first place, granting she had heard arlght, it was ridiculous—that statement, at one's second meeting. No. It could not be that. And again, young men do not tell young women of their love against a throbbing motor, with mouths grim and chins straight ahead. And Wally's arm, against which her cheek was nestled, was taut. It could not be that. But he had spoken. Had said something. Mary turned her face to him and smiled. Brightly. Meaning agreement to these vague words he had spoken. "Yes?" her glance said.

"I consider it only fair to tell you that I intend to kiss you."

The green car drew up in the inky dark at the side of the road and settled down with a gasp. There was a somewhat weary fence, Mary could see, and then the vagueness of innumerable trees, planted in rows, with tain young branches gnarled toward the heavens. An orchard doubtlessly. She rose in the car, and straightened her rumpled skirt, and then sank back again, with a smile for Wally. He had turned toward her, and was watching her, one arm across the seat of the car behind her shoulders, and the other resting on the steering wheel.

"Well?" he said. Did it mean so little to her then, that she could rise, and straighten the folds of her skirt, and sink back again with that bright vague smile for him? Was she prepared to ignore his declaration to save him pain? Dolores,—

"Elaine, dear." He called her their play name.

"Wally." Her sweet little face with the misty green eyes turned upward toward him.

He grew whimsical. Her fondness for this tow-headed youth increased when his smile was wry, and his eyes narrowed.

"It isn't of much interest to you, I 'spose, dear. But the fact remains that it was said—and maidens have been known to show some interest in the statement heretofore."

Quite suddenly there was no place upon which to rest her eyes, and she was thankful for the black of the night that enfolded him. She had heard aright that first time. He had said that he loved her. Her heart thudded once, with a queer resounding beat, as if it had been lifted and then dropped into place again. Wally loved her. Well! Well, well! What did one usually respond to a statement like that? Did one say, "thank-you very much?" It was stupid, sitting there with her hands clasped tightly together, and the presence of Wally beside her, waiting. What did one say? Oh this was unbearable. Aeons has sped by since he had spoken. It was ridiculous. He expected something.

"I—" she cleared her throat. "I—" and could say no more. Knew not what to say, indeed. You didn't thank him. That would be facetious. Like a coy young lady in a play or a book. She turned toward him, and in a very low voice, responded, troubled, "I don't know what to say, Wally."

"Response enough, Dolores." He lifted his hand to her hair, and brushed the straight silken strands away from her face, holding it behind her ear. He regarded her gravely. Her small face that looked up at him, with the eyes that he could not see—albeit he knew that the mists swam in them—the wistfulness of a child that is bewildered by the strange forces in the dark, emanated from her.

"You don't love me, Elaine?"

"I—no, Wally." The direct thrust carried with it a wound, but one more quickly healed because of its directness.

"Not now, Elaine. You are wonderful. The stars follow you, you say. How can they help it? I, being just a man, am not the marvel that you are, sweet. Why should you care for me now? It is stupid of me to expect it. Some day, however. Some day, Elaine—when you have known men—and discover that I am no better than most—"

"Wally." She placed her hand over his, where it tightened on her shoulder, and was impatient with herself for the desire to comfort him. Why did she wish to take his head in her arms, and murmur soothing phrases?

"It's all right, sweet. Don't let anything bother you. I'll be sticking round for some time yet, did you know that?—and knowing it, does it hand you a thrill?"

She pressed his fingers with her own. Wally had reverted again, and though the absence of the pressure relieved her a bit, this light-heartedness carried with it even more poignancy, revealing as it did the sombre depths he endeavored to hide. His light manner was as a gauze curtain through which one could peer and see, ever present, the emotion, the feeling that mattered, that his flippancy could not hide.

A star fell into the black of the fields at their right, with a swooning grace that faintly lit the path through which it sped.

Wally's voice came to her again as something apart from the blur that was he at her side. His grasp on her shoulders tightened. "I consider it only fair to tell you, you ravishing red-head you with the hair of a mediaeval page—I consider it only fair to tell you that, with your desire or no—I intend to kiss you. Hard." He looked at her. "How does it strike you?"

"Not any," said Mary firmly, and knew herself for a liar, and was furious with herself for the little skip of her heart in anticipation. The little skip of her heart had come unknowingly. Before Mary had had time to counsel herself. "You Mary! What right has your heart to skip a beat?—you who have no time for love and the encumbrances that trail in the wake of love? And what, you asked flippantly, what is love? Certainly nothing that can in any way affect your heart, you who lack the maternal instinct, and have no time for the heavy passion, and have not yet reached the stage where you need depend upon a man for support. For you dissected love, and discovered that it pulsated with emotion engendered by either, any, or all these three. What right has your heart to skip a beat, Mary?" Nevertheless her heart continued to skip, and she felt a little pulse in her cheek of whose existence she had been unaware heretofore.

The feel of Wally's arm hardened across the small of her back. She was drawn toward him, and felt the hard expanse of his chest against her breast. Then his lips found hers.—

On sped the little green car through the night of milky radiance poured earthward by the stars. Wally was silent beside her, giving his entire attention to the wheel. She cast a glance at him once or twice and then sank still lower in the cushioned seat, placing her head against his arm, and closing her eyes. The savor of his kiss was on her lips, and she touched her handkerchief to her mouth to rid herself of the imprint. The car leaped forward with a jerk, and she touched the bit of linen to her cheek. Should Wally have seen that gesture he would become befuddled as to the cause of it. It was difficult to wipe the feel of his kiss from her lips however. It had gone deeper than that.

BUY IN BRISTOL!

A DOLLAR SPENT IN BRISTOL IS WORTH TWO SPENT ELSEWHERE BECAUSE IT IS REINVESTED BY LOCAL PEOPLE IN LOCAL ENTERPRISES AND HELPS TO PAY FOR LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS

Did you ever really give the subject of the local merchant and you any serious thought?

Perhaps you are a loyal citizen and patronize local shops and stores as a matter of loyalty, but as this is not a lecture it will do no harm to read this, anyhow.

Your local merchant is first a citizen, a resident of your community the same as you are.

He lives in your community, pays taxes along with you for the upkeep and improvement of your community; he raises his family and sends his children to school—schools which he helps, with you, to maintain.

If he is a butcher, he buys clothes and shoes for his family from a fellow-merchant No matter what his line of business, he spends money with other business men of the community.

He banks in local banks; he takes his family of an evening to the local shows.

Summed up, the money he makes in the community is spent in it.

Were it not for your local merchant, there would be no schools, no paved streets, no public buildings, no progress nor prosperity. He is here day in and day out, rain or shine, giving his time and energy and money to whatever will benefit the district, taking part in the administrations of the community or aiding to regulate the administration for the best interests of the community by his vote.

HE IS A CITIZEN—

Is he not entitled, then, to consideration?

But there is something more than a call for your loyalty to him as citizen to citizen—neighbor to neighbor.

Living here as he does, he comes to know his customers. They are to him not "just customers," but "fellow citizens," "good neighbors." As he will be here tomorrow and the next day and next year, meeting his customers face to face, day after day, his business gets his personal attention—every transaction is a personal dealing between him and the patron.

He is your neighbor—your fellow citizen, building for tomorrow and next year, and fully cognizant that the only way to build is to sell good goods at right prices.

Your local merchant is in himself a guarantee of his goods and prices and services because he is always at the same stand meeting largely the same customers.

He cannot exist upon the patronage of transients—his livelihood comes from permanent residents; his aim is to make permanent residents regular customers. He must do this—hence his wares, his prices and his service are all and always arranged and held to this end.

You never heard your live-wire, wide-awake home merchant say, "Oh, well, one customer more or less makes no difference." Every customer, to him, is important; a new customer is eagerly sought, and a customer less—well, your local merchant will not let it happen if anything just and reasonable under the sun will prevent such a thing happening.

So not alone out of a sense of loyalty to your community, but for your own sake—for the sake of your purse and the satisfaction of being given personal attention and service—buy of our home merchants.

dent to such solicitation, it is obvious that the holding up for solicitation purposes of the traveling public of our state or other states by any local group for purely local purposes is wrong in principle and should not be indulged in, and I, as a citizen, commend Chief McGuckin for his prompt actions.

"The traveler on our highways is the same type of citizen as we are ourselves; he comes from somewhere, where he has the same civic obligations to meet which we all have, and doubtlessly cheerfully meets them. For him to come through Bristol and be solicited to bear responsibilities of any kind whatsoever is an imposition he should not be subject to and one that would not creditably reflect upon the citizenship of Bristol, who have in the past and we are confident in the future, will be able to meet their civic responsibilities from their own resources.

"I cannot refrain from reference to a humorous side which is presented by the incident of Monday last.

"From time to time it has been my privilege and pleasure to assist the borough activities where financial assistance would accomplish something for the betterment or improvement of the Borough.

"Certain of our citizens have criticised such action on my part. What must be the indignation of these same citizens who object to one of their own number assisting in our public endeavors when they contemplate indiscriminate solicitation of the traveling public for a purpose we are abundantly able to care for ourselves.

"These complaining citizens certainly will agree with me that it is fortunate the Legislature, in its wisdom, enacted the amendment signed by Governor Fisher April 27, 1927."

The act of the recent legislature is printed on page one.
